

XX. A List of the Coleoptera of the Maltese Islands. By MALCOLM CAMERON, M.B., R.N., and A. CARUANA
 GATTO, LL.D.

[Read March 20th, 1907.]

IN publishing this contribution we trust that it may be of some service to collectors and those interested in the distribution of species.

We must acknowledge our indebtedness to the following gentlemen, who have been good enough to examine some of the species:—MM. Fauvel, Reitter, Pic, Régimbart, Desbrochers des Loges, Dr. David Sharp, and Mr. E. A. Newbery; also to Mr. G. C. Champion, who has kindly allowed us to see many species from the collection of Commander J. J. Walker, R.N., which had not been obtained by us, and which in the list are noted as Coll. J. J. W., or teste J. J. W. Names of species in brackets are those which have not come under our notice, although recorded by others.

The order and nomenclature adopted throughout is that of the “Cat. Col. Europæ” of Heyden, Reitter, and Weise (1891 edition).

The figures refer to the months.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION OF THE MALTESE ISLANDS.

The group of the Maltese Islands consists of the two islands of Malta and Gozo, and of the small islets of Comino, Cominotto, and Filfola.

Malta, which is the main island, is  $17\frac{1}{2}$  miles in length and  $8\frac{1}{2}$  miles in breadth, its area being 95 square miles; Gozo is 9 miles in length,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  in breadth, and has an area of 20 square miles; Comino has an area of about 1 square mile, and Cominotto and Filfola are even smaller.

They are situated almost at the centre of the Mediterranean; the distance from Capo Passero in Sicily is about 60 miles, and from the nearest point in Africa about 200 miles. Close to the African shore lies the island of Lampedusa, and further west, midway between Sicily and Africa, the islands of Linosa and Pantelleria. Both with regard to the flora and fauna all these islands bear a great affinity to the Maltese group, but, as may be supposed, the productions of the latter are even more allied to those of Sicily. As a matter of fact, the Maltese Islands, in their general appearance, are very much like the southern part of Sicily and the country about Syracuse, the only difference being the greater flatness of the land in Malta, and the want of trees and water-courses.

The climate, as lately well described by Mr. T. B. Fletcher, R.N., F.E.S.<sup>1</sup> may be divided roughly into a wet and a dry season, the former beginning in October and ending in March, the latter including the remaining months. Showers of rain occur also in April, May, and September, but in June, July, and August they are much rarer. The average rainfall is over 20 inches, and the mean annual temperature is 65·6° Fahr.

The appearance of the islands in summer is extremely sterile and barren, mainly because, even where the soil is cultivated, the small fields are enclosed by numberless stone walls of loose stones, and the rocky wastes are almost devoid of all vegetation. The heat is then almost tropical, the temperature ranging from 75° to 90° in the shade.

In Malta there are no mountains, rivers, or marshes. The highest point in the islands is 758 feet above sea-level; the limestone cliffs on the west and south very often rise abruptly from the sea to a height of 300 or 400 feet. In Malta the land slopes gradually on the east to the water edge, forming numerous bays and harbours, and drops suddenly on the other side by a large "fault," which crosses the island from end to end at right angles to its long axis.

The place of rivers is taken by deep valleys, called "Wieds" in the Maltese language; and in these "wieds" during the rainy season water runs at the bottom, and pools of water may be found even afterwards, but in summer they are perfectly dry.

Some of these valleys, particularly those which are less cultivated, are very good collecting-grounds, and in the proper season trips to such valleys as L'Imtahlep, Jneina, Inquisitor's Palace, Bishop's Garden, Ta Baldu, Encita, Babu, El Ghasel, in Malta, and Migiarro, Xlendi, Ducira, in Gozo, besides affording a good harvest in insects and plants, are always very interesting and pleasant excursions.

One of the most noteworthy features of the islands is the want of trees. There must have been a time at some remote epoch in which trees and shrubs were not so scarce, and a certain amount of "bush," of which traces are still left, must have existed. At present the only indigenous trees and shrubs to be seen in some of the valleys just mentioned, not to speak of the rarer species, are the following:—Crataegus oxyacantha and azarolus, on which feeds Rhamphus pulicarius, Herbst; Populus alba, Salix alba and pedicillata, from which we obtained Smicronyx cyaneus, Gyll., a few Quercus ilex, Pistacia lentiscus, Rosmarinus officinalis, Vitex agnus-castus, Tamarix africana, (these two latter in Gozo), Euphorbia dendroides, Erica multiflora, Rhamnus oleoides, and Cineraria maritima, and Inula crithmoides on rocks near the sea. Rubus fruticosus, Smilax aspera, Lonicera implexa, Clematis cirrhosa, Hedera helix, and Asparagus acutifolius represent the climbing shrubs. Of cultivated trees, the Carob, Ceratonia siliqua, is generally spread, and with its dark evergreen foliage and low spreading branches marks in a characteristic way every Maltese landscape. Fig trees (Ficus carica) in several varieties and prickly pears (Opuntia vulgaris) are also widely grown by the walls in fields and country tenements. The cultivation of orange trees, which used to yield the finest and most luscious fruit in the world, is at present much neglected, on account of the scale-insect disease, and of the extensive free importation of oranges to Malta from Sicily and elsewhere. Vines are very abundant, and so are almond trees in some places, but though vineyards are to be met with in some places, woods, parks, and extensive groves are absolutely wanting.

The obvious result of this want of trees on Coleoptera, as may be seen in the list which follows, is the small number of Longicorns, other tree-borers and dendrophilous species. Considering that rivers, lakes, or any other permanent water-courses or open reservoirs are absolutely wanting, the presence of water-beetles may appear a puzzle. They are certainly not very numerous, but until the pools or streamlets at the bottom of the valleys dry up, the collector may successfully work for them among the Charæ, Nitellæ, and the fresh-water Algæ which then grow, or under stones at the water's edge. Chadwick's Reservoir or Wied el Klia, Fiddian, Marsa, Jneina, S. Martin, Boschetto, Ghirghenti, may be pointed out as good localities for water and for water-loving beetles.

Cicindelæ, Scarites, Dyschirius, Bembidia, Pogonus, Anisodactylus, Acupalpus, Diclirotrichus, Bledius, Phaleria, Trachyscelis, Opatrum, Clitobius, and several Anthici are found in sandy and marshy places like Marsa, Salina, Melleha Bay, Marsa Scala, Birzebuggia, and Jneina. Umbellifers, Chrysanthemum coronarium and other composites, the Sulla (Hedysarum coronarium) yield a good harvest of Anthrenus, Attagenus, Colotes, Ebæus, Attalus, Dasytes, Psilothrix, Haplocnemus, Dasytiscus, Sitones, Ceu-thorrhynchus, Labidostomus, and Mylabris; whilst on Cynara horrida the Larini, Tillus transversalis, and the Cetonixæ may be collected. On Asphodel Agapanthia asphodeli is found; on Rumex, Apion æneum and meridianum; on Asparagus, Crioceris paracanthesis. Podagrion and Apion malvæ are found on Mallows, Emenadia on Crithmum, Chrysomela grossa on Nigalla, C. bicolor on Thymus capitatus, C. americana on Rosmarinus, C. quadrigemina, Suff., on Hypericum crispum, Epilachna on Ecbalium, Longitarsus strangulatus on Cineraria maritima, and Epicometis squalida and Leucocelis funesta on all sorts of flowers.

A great number of species like Pimelia, Tentyria, Stenosis, Akis, Scaurus, Asida, Phylax, Pentodon, Hypera, Gonocephalum, Silpha and others are found in the country by the road-sides, and on waste ground, crawling about or under stones.

Every one knows where to look for Ateuchi, Aphodii, Onthophagi, Histeridæ, Saprini, and many Staphylinidæ. The best time for collecting is, for autumnal species, from September, after the first rains, to the middle of November, and for spring species from February to June.

From February to April vegetation is at its best; Pheasant's-eye, Asphodel, Ranunculi, Helianthemi, Chrysanthemums, Poppies, Mallows, the introduced but abundant Oxalis cernua, and the Hedysarum coronarium in fields are in full bloom. A great nuisance in sweeping plants and beating the small bushes is the extraordinary abundance of young snails to which beetles are found to be sticking in the net or on the tray.

By July all herbage is dried up, and on account of the burning sun and the parched-up soil, the collector has to limit himself to beating trees in some shady valley, or in gardens and cultivated fields. Aulacophora abdominalis is then found on melon and cucumber plants. Longitarsus, Aphthona, Phyllotreta, Sphaeroderma, Demetrias atricapillus, and many Apions may thus be obtained.

In autumn, besides stone-turning and looking in the débris washed down by rains, a ready way to obtain some good species is by beating or shaking on the tray the bundles of Inula and other plants which are bound together to dry, and left by the country people on the ground in fields or rocky places.

The distribution of species is very irregular; some of the most interesting and special forms are quite common, others have a very limited area of distribution, being local and very rare. Thus there is no difficulty in getting at the proper season—Dasytiscus melitensis, Tentyria lavigata, v. leachi, Asida melitana, Phylax melitensis, while Læmosthenes picicornis, Bruchus duvali, Thylacites beloni are harder to obtain, and Eurynebria complanata, Zuphium olens, Drypta distincta, Calosoma maderæ, Anthaxia umbellatarum, Saperda punctata, Callidium violaceum, Rhopalopus clavipes have been found only in single specimens.

Very little information has been published about the Maltese Coleoptera.

George Waring, in his "Letters from Malta and Sicily" (1843), refers to a collection of beetles which in 1833 was being made in Malta by Dr. Leach, but it appears that unfortunately nothing was ever published about it.

In 1857 Prof. Gavino Gulia delivered a course of entomological lectures at St. Antonio, which were published in 1858; the determination of all species mentioned, however, is so doubtful, to say the least, that the list of species cannot be taken into any account.

One of us contributed to "The Mediterranean Naturalist," in 1893, an article on "The Common Beetles of the Maltese Islands," in which mention is made of about 135 species.

The only other published information which we know of is scattered through various entomological works, and consists mainly of the descriptions of several endemic species.

Far from pretending that the following is a complete list of Maltese beetles, we are sure that further researches and studies will bring out more species, especially among the Micro-Coleoptera; we believe, however, that we may state that the bulk of the Maltese Coleopterous fauna is very fairly represented in our list, the more so considering that this is the first attempt to give a list of the beetles.
