

brief correspondence. It is evident that, if this state wants to compete with Rhode Island, it must be more diligent in the field.

Nevertheless, the little town of Winchester possesses an impressively long row of beautiful pines, whose merit is by no means done justice to in the card which my correspondent has enclosed.

The card and the letters

POWERS-BRIDGE FARMHOUSE, PETERBORO, N.H.

My dear Mr. Collins

You may remember that at a meeting of the Botanical Club last spring I was rash enough to express the belief that there were still some good-sized white pines remaining in New Hampshire. At your suggestion, I wrote in search of definite facts, and I enclose the may find a resting-place in your files or in your waste-basket, at your discretion: I do not care to keep them.

If you have any other "favorite species," I should be glad to measure promising specimens I may see.

With kind regards,

Very sincerely

Charles F. Batchelder

August 31, 1910.

Batchelder, Charles Foster. 1910. "Batchelder, Charles F. Aug. 31, 1910." James Franklin Collins correspondence

View This Item Online: <https://www.biodiversitylibrary.org/item/258556>

Permalink: <https://www.biodiversitylibrary.org/partpdf/273446>

Holding Institution

Harvard University Botany Libraries

Sponsored by

Andrew W. Mellon Foundation

Copyright & Reuse

Copyright Status: Public domain. The BHL considers that this work is no longer under copyright protection.

This document was created from content at the Biodiversity Heritage Library, the world's largest open access digital library for biodiversity literature and archives. Visit BHL at <https://www.biodiversitylibrary.org>.