

East Hartford, Conn.

22 December 1911

Dear Mr. Deane:-

I started on its way to you yesterday which a little papier-mâché which I thought might interest you because of its origin and the wood of which it is made. I presume you know that the authorities of Winchester Cathedral in England are at present engaged in the interesting engineering feat of replacing its foundations. The old ones of wooden piles after a faithful service of seven hundred years, are giving way and new ones of cement are being put in in a soil so saturated by water that much of the work has to be done by divers. Meanwhile the great stone bulk of the building is held practically suspended disposed to pardon it, on the ground that it is written on my knees as I sit up in bed - being still too lazy to arise before mid-morning.

Nevertheless, I have found opportunity to do a little botanical work in the way of mounting specimens and have a problem on my hands in the shape of a considerable quantity of pamphlet which gathered during my absence and for which I have no place.

With cordial regards to Mrs. Deane and best wishes for your Christmas and New Year - a book of which my mother for me -

Sincerely yours,

C. Weatherby
" J

by an elaborate system of timber braces.

One of the ways, in which money is raised for the work is by the sale of small articles made from the old pines which have been taken out.
I am sorry that the paper-cutter I am sending you was slightly injured in the course of a year's travel; but perhaps you will like to see how buck wood looks after seven hundred years.
Incidentally, it is interesting to note that the Norman builders of the twelfth century apparently knew the water-resisting qualities of this wood.

The weather has remained so long open and mild that my time and energies have been much taken up with the auto. For the past week also I have been on the sick list with an annoying indisposition. Of this letter is unusually illegible, I hope you will be

Weatherby, Charles Alfred. 1911. "Weatherby, Charles Alfred Dec. 22, 1911."
Walter Deane correspondence

View This Item Online: <https://www.biodiversitylibrary.org/item/163304>

Permalink: <https://www.biodiversitylibrary.org/partpdf/304106>

Holding Institution

Harvard University Botany Libraries

Sponsored by

IMLS

Copyright & Reuse

Copyright Status: Public domain. The BHL considers that this work is no longer under copyright protection.

This document was created from content at the Biodiversity Heritage Library, the world's largest open access digital library for biodiversity literature and archives. Visit BHL at <https://www.biodiversitylibrary.org>.