My dear Deane: -

I am very sorry that I overlooked a call for extras of your recent note in the Gazette. Was this request entered upon the manuscript, or was it made in some subsequent communication? I can hardly believe that I overlooked such a memorandum upon a manuscript, although of course I may have done so. I take pains to go over each one, looking for just this thing. If it was not upon the manuscript I shall not feel so bad about my oversight, because that is the only place where I would be sure of seeing it at the right time, and it is the place where the authors are directed to indicate their desire for separates. If you are sure that the order was on the manuscript, we will re-set the article, and print extras without additional expense. None were printed at the proper time.

Very truly yours
